‘The role and future of social housing in Europe’

Three Ph.D. projects approaching Danish social housing challenges from different perspectives

The planned and the lived suburb - An architectural-anthropological search for exchange between the enclaves of the suburbs

Bjorn Hjernæg, archistudio 6 and metropolis 73

Contact: bjorn@jernagnes.dk

Constructing segregation through suburban public spaces

INTRODUCTION

The development of suburban social housing is an ongoing topic of debate in the social arena. The social and cultural changes that occur in a city are often reflected in the physical realm of suburban public spaces, where the residents of the suburban social housing areas are situated. The purpose of this study is to explore the construction of segregation through suburban public spaces, and to understand how suburban social housing areas are constructed and perceived by the residents. The research project is conducted in a collaboration between Brabrand and Aarhus University, and the findings will be presented at the conference.

PUBLIC SPACE AS THE RIDGE BETWEEN THE SUBURBAN PUBLIC SPACES AND THE CULTURAL AREAS

The suburban social housing areas are constructed in a cultural context that is different from the urban context. The suburban social housing areas are located in the suburbs, and they are separated from the urban areas by a cultural divide. This cultural divide is created by the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas, and it is reflected in the suburban public spaces. The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas.

The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas. The suburban public spaces are designed to create a cultural divide between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas, and they are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces. The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas.

The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas. The suburban public spaces are designed to create a cultural divide between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas, and they are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces. The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas.

The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas. The suburban public spaces are designed to create a cultural divide between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas, and they are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces. The suburban public spaces are constructed in a way that is different from the urban public spaces, and they are designed to reflect the cultural differences between the suburban social housing areas and the urban areas.